TOTAL POLIO

For slowly day by day,
Disease and pain were wasting
Thy sister's form away.
And now beside thine ashes,
When two long years have gone,
I stand here first, my brother,
And here I weep alone.

I tittle thought, my brother, That you so young and fair, So soon would leave me lonely, My love no more to share; nd as unto my bosom, Your lurely form I prompt, thought hot last the morrow

Might lay you here to rest. Your life was short, my brother,

But beautiful as brief,
No care your brow had clouded,
No heart-corroding grief;
No withered hopes beginning
To waste you day by day,
Till love, on downy pinions,
Has borne you far away.

We miss you here, my brother For you our tears are shed;
We miss you from our circle,
And grieve that you are dead;
And yet we would not call you
From that bright world of bliss, Where your spirit now reposes, To a dreary one like this.

We mourn for you, my brother,
Not as the hopeless mourn;
We know that we shall meet you,
Though you will not return.

A world of light and glory Awaits us evermore; We think of you, there, brother, "Not lost, but gone before."
